COOLIDGE ADDS LARGE AREA TO TONGASS FOREST

Over One Million Acres of Land in S. E. Alaska Is Put in Local Forest.

By a proclamation signed last Wednesday by President Coolidge new areas in Southeastern Alaska were added to Tongass National Forest aggregating 1,110,094 acres, according to an announcement made today by District Forester C. H. Flory. Most of the land involved lies north of Cross Sound and Icy Strait and on the west shore of Lynn Canal.

Some of the area added, Mr. Flory said, has some fine stands of timber. It is estimated that 4,500,000 board feet of timber is contained in such stands.

The one big tract named in the Presidential proclamation lies between Cape Fairweather, on the Gulf of Alaska, and Point Seduction near Haines, in Lynn Canal. It includes all of the lands west, south and east of the recently created Glacier Bay National Monument except the surveyed lands in the Strawberry Point district.

It also includes the north end of Mansfield Peninsula, Sentinel Island, Lincoln Island and smaller islands in Lynn Canal and Icy Strait north heretofore within the forest boundaries.

In addition to these inclusions, all elimination areas adjacent to the incorporated towns are revised by the proclamation. In the past such areas have been eliminated in circular shape with more or less indefinite boundaries. Under the proclamation this is changed. All town-site eliminations are made rectangular and definite landmarks established as points between which boundary lines are established, Mr. Flory said.
